

Greenfylde Dog explores Reception

Greenfylde Dog had been playing with his toy castle and making up imaginative stories about what happened in each room.

He even pretended that he was giving tours of the castle as he had been to a castle once with his family. There, someone had shown them all around and told them lots of facts.

He imagined doing a virtual tour (virtual means you are not actually stood there) of his new school and especially the Reception area and classrooms.

He would start standing in the playground looking at the Reception building.

Children could then see the playground and the fence with the flowers in planters leading to the Reception classes.

The next stop on his tour would be Pippin class outdoor classroom where he could explain the building blocks and mud kitchen.

Inside Pippin classroom he would point out the small world play areas and the role play areas as Greenfyldes Dog loved imaginary play.

In Dove class, he knew they had lots of space to get out construction and building toys.

He couldn't wait to get to Dove's outdoor classroom with its den and steering wheels where you could imagine you were flying a spaceship around the world or travelling to the moon.

His tour would also include Sandew, another classroom. He wondered where the names came from and Miss Oaten had told him they were named after Somerset apples. Greenfylde Dog didn't know many apple names but he was very good at eating them!

Sandew's room was being used for lunchtime this year but when he started it would be full of toys and games and their class would share one of the outdoor classrooms as well.

Greenfylde Dog thought he would be a very good tour guide because he wouldn't forget other important areas like the cloakroom for bags and coats and...

even the toilets!

Maybe you could become a tour guide and pretend to give a tour of your home.

We can't wait for you to join us and make our classrooms full of laughter and fun.
